CVE PIPER SUBMISSION GUIDELINES
LEGAL CONSEQUENCES

Some members are sending clippings from newspapers, magazines and books, with a request that we print them in the CVE Piper.

You must get written permission from the source of the article (writer, publisher, photographer, etc.) Before we can legally reprint these articles or pictures.

We have been advised that this written permission must be in our possession in case of a law suite which can have substantial penalties for our Association.

ERROR AVOIDANCE

Many past submissions to the CVE Piper were hand written, and some were difficult to read by our printers who are not familiar with Escort Carrier names and Navy terminology. The publisher had to guess. As a result, the editor received numerous letters pointing out the errors.

All future letters submitted for publishing must be typed or clearly printed, This may cause problems for some of you, but it will improve the quality of the Piper.

LUVERNE — Johnny Johnson is fondly referred to as a triple-decker by some of the staff at the Royal C. Johnson Veterans Administration Hospital in Sioux Falls, S.D. The nickname refers to the collection of medals Johnson earned while serving in World War II — the Purple Heart, Bronze Star and Navy Commendation.

Johnson, of Luverne, is among more than 60 World War II veterans who have already submitted applications to take part in the first ever Southwest Minnesota Honor Flight, planned in the spring of 2010.

World War II veterans will be flown to the nation's capital free of charge to view their memorial in a whirlwind, two-day trip. Fundraising is just getting under way to provide the trip for up to 120 veterans.

Sitting in his home on East Warren Street earlier this week, just a few blocks down from where he grew up on West Warren Street, Johnson said he just wants to see all of the names of his fellow comrades etched in stone in the World War II memorial, which was completed in 2004.

With the exception of the four years he served in the war, and a brief stint in Worthington, Johnson is a life-long resident of Rock County. He was 21 years old when he and a trio of other guys from Luverne went to Sioux Falls to enlist in the service. Two of the guys didn't pass the test and were sent home, but Johnson and Lloyd Licht were accepted. Each enrolled in the Navy.

"I'd seen so much of the Army fighting, and the Navy recruiter said we'd never have to crawl on our hands and knees, but we crawled on our hands and knees just to survive," he said.

Johnson completed his basic training in San Diego, Calif., while Licht went elsewhere. The two men never saw each other again.

As he awaited assignment to a ship, Johnson worked briefly as a photographer on the California naval base. Then, in early 1942, a unit commander offered him the opportunity to work on the fleet oiler USS Sangamon. The ship was destined for Guadalcanal, a province of the Solomon Islands in the Pacific Ocean.

En route to their destination, one of the men on board contracted spinal meningitis and died, resulting in a quarantine placed on the entire ship. When the quarantine was lifted, the ship headed toward some of the smaller islands in the South Pacific.

World War II veteran Johnny Johnson of Luverne holds the display of the medals he garnered while serving in the Navy. His honors include the Purple Heart, Bronze Star and Navy Commendation medals.

(Julie Buntjer/Daily Globe)

"The Japs had taken over so many of them," Johnson recalled.

His job aboard the USS Sangamon was to work in the 100-octane gas room, managing the fuel hose and aviation fuel tank for America's military airplanes needing to refuel.

"One thing about the fuel system that people don't know — for every gallon of fuel that went out, a gallon of water replaced it," Johnson said. The water sank to the bottom and left the remaining fuel floating on top, while also keeping the ballast of the ship on an even keel.

Two electric and two saltwater turbines were used to pump the fuel to the hangar deck and the flight deck, several decks above the fuel room.

Because of his job several decks below sunlight, Johnson was often unaware of what was going on around the ship during its journeys, unless it was under attack. When that happened, orders were sounded throughout the ship.

USS BAIROKO (As told by Allan Gardner)

“You have been assigned to the Bairoko...an escort carrier now being built in Bremerton, Washington.”

And so in April 1945 began my CVE adventure.

I had been in Great Lakes boot camp and had just finished Quartermaster school in Chicago. A three day train ride brought me to my destination...orders in hand. During the trip I heard that President Roosevelt had died...we had a new Commander in Chief.

The crew was assembled over the next few weeks. We went to training sessions in temporary buildings alongside the carrier, now in the final stages of completion. Work was going on around the clock. The shipyard was turning out CVE's at the rate of about one a month...remarkable then and now. Standing dock side the ship was about the biggest thing I had ever seen. Platforms sticking out all over and a network of pipes and ducts of all sizes...water coming out of some. The traditional battleship grey color was being applied to all exterior surfaces.

On July 16, 1945, we assembled on the flight deck: 65 officers and 709 enlisted men. Captain Harry Temple, USN, accepted the ship on behalf of the Navy from the Todd Pacific Shipbuilding Company. The commissioning pennant was flown; we were official.

I was told that as part of the original crew, I was therefore a “plankowner”...the traditional Navy recognition of those who first man a ship. Carriers still had wooden flight decks...so metal-to-metal contact on landing would not spark a fire situation. To my knowledge wood was not used on decks of other ships. (Months later, during a full moon on a tropical sea I walked the flight deck and wondered which plank was mine)

The navigation division, “N” division, was small, headed by the navigator, Lt James, a regular Navy. A reserve Ensign was next and then there was Chief Quartermaster Archie DeRyckere, USN.

About 10 ratings and seamen followed.

About 4 months earlier, although I never knew it during my entire time aboard, Archie was on a ship that sank during the massive typhoon off Luzon in December 1944 as part of Halsey's fleet protecting MacArthur's invasion of the Philippines. Over 800 men were lost...more than in the Battle of Midway. Archie was in the water 23 hours before being picked up. But that's another story; I will include it later.

With only a short time in the Navy behind me at that time, my personal hierarchy went something like this: first there was God... then the President, next the Captain and then the Chief.

On many occasions the Chief displaced the Captain and President and tied with God for first position.

During training we had moved onto the ship...I was in a very small berthing compartment with about 30 others...in the second tier of a 4 bunk stack. About 20 inches separated me from the canvas underside of the next bunk...that was to be “home” for the next year. Clothing and all my possessions were in my sea bag on the deck nearby.

We became proficient in finding our way around; up and down the many ladders and decks. A booklet was issued describing how compartments were numbered...going from bow to stern use passageways on the port side and from stern to bow go on the starboard...and so on. One of my stations was an occasional watch in the emergency steering station located in the stern right behind the rudder. I was in headphone contact with the bridge and could take over the steering mechanically if the bridge lost that ability. It was dark, hot and noisy...every engine throb and rudder movement was magnified. It was like being on the inside of a drum.

Our shakedown cruise was in the Puget Sound...the waters around the Seattle area and extending seaward. We could go out during the day and return to dockside that evening. Workers were on the ship when we went out and continued fine tuning all systems.

We left the Sound and worked our way down the coast: Alameda, Long Beach and finally berthed at North Island, San Diego. We took aboard a Marine air group. I think they were flying the F4U Corsairs. The pilots all thought they were hot shots. During flight training, if there was enough wind over the deck the planes took off conventionally (if there was not enough wind they used the cats). The pilots would rev the engines with the brakes on until the tail lifted... then gun down the deck and lift early so by the time they were opposite the island they were higher than the Captain. The scuttlebutt was that they would then “look down on a Navy Captain...” I heard they kept a scoreboard to that effect in the ready room but I never saw it myself.

In October 1945, we headed West for Hawaii and beyond. One moonless night off Hawaii we had gunnery practice scheduled. I had a friend who was a gunner's mate and asked if I could take his station on a 20mm for the practice. It was so dark you could not see who was manning the gun next to you. I got into the harness and put on the headphones. He cautioned me to follow instructions that would come from the gunnery officer and not to fire until commanded to do so. I would see the light moving in the sky and that would be my target. Tracers were every 4 or 5 rounds so I could see the results and correct my aiming point. So far, so good.

I saw a light about 30 degrees above the horizon...moving from right to left. The gunnery officer called out to start tracing...a moment later came “Commence firing”. I and the others on the platform did. All the other gun tracers were going wide to the right... mine was the only one remotely headed toward the target. “Cease firing...cease firing!!!” What I was not told is that the first light was the tow plane...and the light on the target sleeve was far behind. Fortunately I was not a good shot. I quickly gave back the gun to the gunners mate and that was the end of my gunnery experience. I went below to change shorts...and imagine the pilot did so as well upon landing.

One of my duties was changing the (many) ships clocks when we crossed time zones. In order not to impact the ship's routine it was always done at night. One of the clocks was in the Captain's sea cabin....on the wall right over the bunk. I had to step on the bunk to get to it...and one night, the Captain was in it. Much to my surprise he was pretty good about it and didn't chew me out (very much). In November 1945 we continued westward. Every day was drill day: General Quarters, flight operations, fire drills, man overboard drills and so on. We were good and got better. Fire drills were serious... everyone had a station. When you think about it, a carrier is a thin skinned box crammed with aviation fuel and high explosives. During flight operations when planes were being recovered each one landed in a controlled crash. It's a miracle there were not more accidents and fires.

The ship arrived at Saipan and stayed several days. We had the opportunity for shore leave and were told to stay in populated areas and away from the hills. There were still pockets of enemy soldiers who did not surrender.

In December 1945, the ship went to the Lingayan Gulf, Luzon...and later that month to Hong Kong for a week and then back to Manila Bay for Christmas. It was the first Christmas there since the 4 year Japanese occupation and celebrations were continuous. The locals all treated us royally.

After the New Year we headed East and stopped at Guam, then Hawaii and arrived back in San Diego on January 26th..good to be home. In February 1946, we headed North back to Bremerton, Washington...all the while conducting flight and training exercises. In late February we took on an air group at Whidbey Island, Washington. The ship was moored starboard side to the dock. The entire ships company assembled on the dock for an “official” photograph. There was a slight mist and the ship in the background had a ghostly look about it. “click!” We were history. I got a copy of the print..long and narrow, rolled it and promptly forgot it.

About this time officers and men were leaving the ship for separation from the Naval service. Replacements arrived in about equal number.

My turn came on June 3, 1946, when I was transferred to the Terminal Island separation center in Los Angeles...and a few days later I became a civilian again. Two years...in at 17 and out as 19 as a QM2/c..

Fast forward 62 years.....I was looking in the very back low storage drawer for some old check stubs...my hand felt a round paper cylinder. It was the tightly rolled photo taken of the ship and crew alongside the dock at Whidbey Island Naval Air Station. The rubber band around it had long since rotted away...but the roll was as tight as a window shade on a spring roller. It resisted opening but relented and soon I saw it...on a slightly yellow photo paper. Captain Temple was front row center and Chief DeRyckere was directly behind him. I was way in the 5th row...with another QM buddy.

On the back I had noted the name and home town of each of our "N" Division...and I could see each face as I read the names. Archie had signed the listing with his home town as Laurel, Montana and added, ..."a seagoing cowboy".

With computer advances over the years I decided to try to locate him...looked up the city on Google and fired off emails to the local bank and newspaper asking if anyone there remembered him. I included my name and phone number.

A few days later I got a call..a husky voice said" Gardner! Get down here and clean these bilges!" It was Archie and he sounded just the same. My wife and I visited him and his wife, Jackie in San Diego where they now live in a house overlooking the sea. He is still erect and his eyes twinkle...memory sharp. He remained in the Navy and became commissioned; going from enlisted to commissioned is rare. He retired as a Lt Cmdr.

Then, for the first time, he told me about the loss of his the ship, the Destroyer USS Hull, in the 1944 typhoon 500 miles East of Luzon and how he was rescued after 23 hours in the water. Archie was always one of my personal heroes....even more so now as his story unfolded.

The story, and events surrounding it, is graphically told in the book, "Halsey's Typhoon" by Bob Drury and Tom Clavin. They spent days with Archie and recorded his experience and a lot of background details. The publishers have graciously permitted the use of some of the material. Direct quotes from the book are printed in Italics.

Preface and excerpts from Halsey's Typhoon, copyright 2007 by Bob Drury and Tome Clavin. Used by permission of Grove/Atlantic, Inc. The very first sentence in the book is "Chief Quartermaster Archie DeRyckere was more astonished than frightened." The Hull was a 1500 ton 1930 destroyer. It was certified to recover from a 72 degree roll (90 degrees is flat) but that was before radar and heavier ordnance was installed that changed the center of gravity. She was top heavy and rolling badly in the broiling seas.

Moments before dawn on December 18, Archie DeRyckere bolted from his bunk in the chief's quarters in the bow of the destroyer Hull to the sound of a refrigerator bouncing from bulkhead to bulkhead. After helping lash it down, he was making his way through the wardroom in officer's country when he felt the ship lie over on her side. Men tumbled from their beds, and DeRyckere was staggered. He regained his balance only by standing on the starboard bulkhead. As the vessel slowly righted herself, he ran through the chart house and onto the second deck. The ceiling below was below him and the spume stung his face like a sandblaster. The starboard side of the Hull was submerged.

Making his way from the chart house to the captain's bridge, DeRyckere could not differentiate ocean from air, and visibility was so low that he could not make out the ship's bow, no more than 120 feet away. He began climbing the starboard skipper's ladder when, midway to the bridge, another wall of water slammed into the Hull's port beam. He hung on as she lay so far over that the back of his head grazed the ocean's surface.

The ship laid down on its side and never recovered...water poured in all openings.

The Hull was lolling on her side at a 90-degree angle, still locked deep in the trough between waves. Their height, incongruously, reminded Schultz of a visit to New York City, when he'd strolled down Fifth Avenue gazing at the skyscrapers.

"Who knew the crazy things you think of when you're going to die?" DeRykere, meanwhile, suddenly recalled that he had forgotten to make his noon report to the Captain informing him the ship's chronometers had been wound.

And then the Hull dropped out from beneath them. It happened so fast. DeRykere and Schultz each put an arm around Gherstly. They nodded their good-byes as the Pacific Ocean surged around them. DeRykere had read the charts; he knew they were sailing close to the deepest part of the Philippine Trench, an area named the Galathea Depth where the seabed was nearly seven miles below the surface. The pressure at that depth would be equal to over one thousand of earth's atmospheres. But DeRykere also knew that he'd be long dead before his corpse reached the bottom. Fish food. Before he was sucked down into the vacuum with the USS Hull, before he was driven so deep he thought his eardrums would explode, the last thing Chief Archie DeRykere, from Laurel, Montana, heard was the rough bitter plaint of his friend, Chief Bosun's Mate, Ray Schultz.

"This is not good," he thought. He was an understated man. "We're going down and there's nobody around to help us"

The Chief was in the water 23 hours...occasionally linking up with other survivors.

By this time DeRykere's eyes were nearly completely swollen shut and so scabbed over from saltwater sores that he considered it a small miracle that he even spotted the smoke from the ship. He had stroked only a few dozen yards when something knocked hard, against his back. A frisson of electricity ran up his spine as he wheeled. Through blurred vision he barely make out the outline of a large dorsal fin. The shark had to be six feet. "A big bastard," he thought, and said aloud, "You know, God, first you take my ship. Then you have me swim around in the ocean all night, And now you're gonna feed me to the sharks? That ain't right."

God must have been listening...the shark moved away.

He was finally picked up by the USS Tabberer DD 418 skippered by Lt Cmdr Plage. The Tabberer had been ordered to maintain course and speed and not to stop for me in the water. The skipper defied that order and turned back to search. 55 Hull survivors were rescued by Lt Cmdr Plage.

Recently, led by Archie DeRykere, they have mounted a campaign to have Cmdr (Ret) Henry Lee Plage awarded a posthumous Medal of Honor. The Navy has as yet to make a decision. While my direct involvement with the Bairoko ended in June 1946...the ship made several cruises to the far East in 1946 and 1947. She was active in the Korean War and was awarded 3 Battle stars. In 1954 she participated in the hydrogen bomb test at Eniwetok.

In July 1954 she reported to the long Beach Naval Shipyard and was decommissioned in 1955. The Bairoko was sold for scrap in 1960.

On my 50th birthday my wife, Alice, gave me a desk set with two pens. On it was a block of wood and plaque describing it as having come from the deck of the USS Bairoko, CVE 115. I finally have my plank.

My wife and I visited Archie and Jackie in San Diego several times...most recently last October when we all went to the commissioning of the new Maken Island LHD 8.

I continue to be in touch with him and, no, I never did clean those bilges.

From 1942 through 1945, the USS Sangamon earned eight Battle Stars. Johnson's personal display of the honors he earned includes the Philippine Liberation, American campaign, Asiatic Pacific, Good Conduct and World War II medals, along with the Combat Action ribbon.

The battle of his life

May 4, 1945, started out just like any other day aboard ship. Johnson said they were headed toward Japan's mainland when orders were sounded that the USS Sangamon was under attack.

"This was supposed to be our last encounter with the Japs," he said. The attack, etched in history as the Battle of Okinawa, began at approximately 7 p.m. when Japanese kamikazes — suicide pilots — organized their attack. According to historical accounts, the first kamikaze missed its mark and hit the water about 25 feet from the ship. A short time later, at 7:33 p.m., a Kamikaze dropped his bomb on the center of the flight deck and flew his plane right into the target. Fires broke out everywhere, and Johnson and his comrades worked to protect the fuel tank from exploding by spraying carbon dioxide onto the steel tank. When the work was done, they crawled through a tube up two decks to get to the weather deck. They were trapped there because the hatch was locked, and had to wait until a first lieutenant came along and opened the door.

It was when the door opened that Johnson's memory goes blank. When the fresh air hit the space where they were standing, a fire ball erupted and burned the sailors from head to foot. They passed out immediately, and Johnson remained unresponsive for quite a while. The men were transported to a forward dressing room, created to treat the injured, and were packed in skin grafting grease to keep the air from reaching their bodies.

Johnson remembers the horrible smell of the grease, the inability to see, hear or talk and the words of his skipper when he said, "I brought you out here, and I'm going to bring you home."

"They kept us doped up for a long while — at least a couple months," Johnson said. "They kept us wrapped up like a mummy." Today, Johnson has little scarring to remind him of that harrowing day back in 1945.

Good with the bad

While there was little to celebrate among soldiers and sailors fighting in World War II, Johnson said they did what they could to cheer each other up during their nearly four years aboard ship. After successfully securing an island and chasing the Japanese away, the men were treated to beer parties on the island.

Then there were the day-long initiation rituals each time the ship crossed the equator. Johnson said the clippers were brought out by the seasoned sailors, and the newbies had to get their heads shaved with the dull blades of the device. Johnson described the feeling as getting your hair yanked out by the handfuls.

"It's a wonder what you do for entertainment sometimes," he said. Perhaps the best memory Johnson has of his time at war was the USO tour stop by comedian Bob Hope and a beautiful female entertainer, Frances Langford.

"They didn't have much power for the mics," recalled Johnson, adding that Langford wasn't sure what to do on stage because the guys couldn't hear her.

"One guy said, 'Just stand there, lady!'" Johnson said with a smile. "They hadn't seen a woman for so long," said his wife, Rose.

Johnson said the USO tour performers like Hope deserve a lot of credit because of the risks they took to perform for the troops. "Even guys on the island would swim out and throw hand grenades at the ship," he said.

U.S.S. Independence: A Triple Hulled, Weapon-Laden Monster That is Surprisingly Affordable

USS Independence (LCS-2), the class prototype for the Independence-class littoral combat ship, will be the sixth ship of the United States Navy to be named for the concept of independence. It is the design produced by the General Dynamics consortium for the Navy's littoral combat ship program, and competes with the Lockheed Martin-designed USS Freedom.

It is intended as a small assault transport that can take on various capabilities with the installation of mission modules. The ship is a trimaran design that was delivered to the Navy at the end of 2009.

This beast will sail close to the shore and throw everything imaginable at an enemy—from armored vehicles and helicopters to shells, torpedoes and missiles. Plus, it can hustle at a rumored 60 knots. Basically, that means the enemy will have a difficult time escaping the wrath of this mighty vessel no matter where they are. . And the best part is that the price tag tops out at only $208 million, which is fairly frugal for the US government.

THE COAT OF ARMS THE USS INDEPENDENCE, LCS 2

Shield:

Azure (Dark Blue) a representation of the new Independence, prow to the front, the national flag displayed, on ocean waves, all proper; a bordure embattled of six merlons Or, charged with eight mullets of the field.

Crest:

On a wreath Or and Azure (Dark Blue) the Liberty Bell surmounted by a United States national flag of thirty stars and a commodore's pennant of fifteen saltirewise proper.

SYMBOLISM

Shield:

Dark blue and gold are traditionally associated with the United States Navy. The field is charged with a representation of the new Independence at sea. The crenellated bordure bears six merlons, each representing one of the previous ships to bear the name Independence. The eight mullets on the bordure recall the battle stars awarded Independence (CV-22) for distinguished service during World War II. Gold also denotes excellence.

Crest:

The Liberty Bell signifies the freedoms achieved by America's independence from England's domination and emphasizes the participation in gaining national independence of the first ships to bear the name. The stars and stripes and commodore's pennant of the early nineteenth century recall the nation's struggles of that historic period.

"Libertas Per Laborem Audentium" (Independence Through Bold Action) in gold letters on a dark blue scroll garnished Argent doubled gold with dark blue garnish.

Seal:

The coat of arms as blazoned on a white oval within a dark blue collar edged on the outside with stylized gold cable and inscribed at top "USS Independence" and in base "LCS 2" all in gold letters.

The “INDEPENDENCE” Namesake

INDEPENDENCE 1

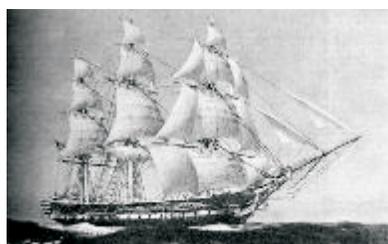

The first INDEPENDENCE was commissioned in 1776 was a brig of 12 guns. She was built in Kingston Massachusetts at Jones river landing by William Drew as a ship of the Massachusetts Provincial Navy. The procurement agent for the Provincial Government of Massachusetts was William Sever. The Commanding Officer was Capt. Simeon Sampson. She cruised of the coast of Massachusetts for 3 months, taking several prizes, in that time. She was captured off the coast of Nova Scotia in a running Gun battle with British ships HMS Hope and HMS Nancy. She was condemned by the British Admiralty and disposed by a Prize Court. Her guns were removed and used to reinforce Fort Cumberland.

INDEPENDENCE 2

The second INDEPENDENCE was the first INDEPENDENCE in the Continental Navy, a sloop built in Baltimore, Maryland. In September 1776 she cruised under Captain John Young along the Atlantic Coast to the Caribbean to guard American merchant trade in the West Indies. In mid-1777 she sailed for France. She captured two prizes en route and disposed of these in France before the Royal Navy could interfere.

INDEPENDENCE 3

INDEPENDENCE, First ship-of-the-line commissioned in the U.S. Navy, launched 22 June 1814 in the Boston Navy Yard. She immediately took on guns and was stationed with frigate Constitution to protect the approaches to Boston Harbor and remained there until the end of the war with Britain. Under command was Captain William Crane who led a squadron out from Boston on 3 July 1815, and began her first overseas cruise.

INDEPENDENCE returned to Newport 15 November 1815 where she became the flagship of Commodore John Shaw until placed in ordinary service in 1822. INDEPENDENCE remained in ordinary service at Boston until 1836 where she was cut down to one covered fighting deck with poop and Forecastle.

INDEPENDENCE 4

The fourth INDEPENDENCE was built in 1918 by Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., Alameda, Calif., for the United States Shipping Board. She was delivered to the Navy and commissioned 16 November 1918, Lt. O. P. Rankin in command. INDEPENDENCE sailed with a cargo of foodstuffs 6 December 1918, arrived New York 1 January 1919; and continued on to England. Upon her return to New York, the ship decommissioned 20 March 1919 and was returned to the USSB. She was later extensively rebuilt and sold 7 August 1930 to Baltimore Mail Steamship Co. and renamed City of Norfolk. In 1940 she was reacquired by the Navy and served in World War II as troop transport Neville (q.v.).

Editors Corner

Thanks to your Board of Governors we have a contract with the Chicago museum and the noted model builder Bill Waldorf to build a 1:96 scale model of the USS Guadalcanal (CVE-60), and the Destroyer Escort USS Pillsbury (DE 133).

They will be donated to the museum and put on display in conjunction with the captured German submarine (U-505).

This is quite an accomplishment and we hope to have it delivered to the museum by summer of 2011.

Bill Miller (CVE 92), has made a tremendous contribution to the CVE legacy. His extensive album is now on display on our website for everyone to see. Joe Judge, the curator for the Naval Museum in Norfolk, scanned each and every ship in Bills album for us! What a good friend he is to ECSAA to do all that. He then forwarded the pictures and information to Joyce Wilson our associate editor for inclusion in our website. We are fortunate to have her also.

Now I have a favor to ask of all the shipmates who receive this paper, in order to get more exposure and publicity for the CVE's, I'm asking you to go down to your local newspaper and submit an advertisement in the personal section like: WWII pictures and info. Log onto WWW.Escortcarriers.com. We want to get your story out to more people before our time runs out. This will be your contribution to our legacy. If any of you have any personal pictures you would like to share with your shipmates, send them to me. I'll have Joyce put them on the website for the world to see. I'm posting mine so you can see to what I'm referring.

For your information: Lowes & Home Depot offer a 10% year round discount to retired veterans. They will also give a discount to veterans with proof of service. Brother Wayne Catalina of the Bismarck Sea CVE-95 wrote to say he enjoyed the Editors Column and the "Piper" paper as a whole.

Let your editor know what you'd like to read about and send me your suggestions. Cut- off date for information to be included in the next "Piper" is one month before we go to press. Our "Piper" papers will be issued in Winter- January, Spring- April, Summer-July and Fall-October

One last Item: Membership- If your name is on the delinquent list for not having paid your dues; it's not fair to those who have, so this issue of the Piper will be the last issue you will receive. If you have a financial problem let Mage your membership chairman know and he will waive your dues. Look at the date due on your address label and I know a lot of you have forgotten but we cannot continue to send papers to those who have not paid dues- some since 2007.

Hope to see you all in Branson.

Charlie

President's Message

The Fourth of July is coming. Memorial Day has come and gone.

We celebrate the birth of this great Nation and pause to honor and mourn those who have sacrificed so that we may continue to celebrate the birth of our Nation.

The Escort Carrier Sailor and Airmen Association was formed to perpetuate the memory of those who served on the "Little Giants". We, as individuals, must do our best to honor those who have gone before us. We must pass on to our children and grandchildren what you and your shipmates did for them.

We need to encourage them to join our organization, come with us to the reunions and help keep alive the sacrifices so many of you have made.

LET'S START WITH BRANSON THIS SEPTEMBER!!

Johnson gets a twinkle in his eye and a smile on his face when he tells the story of the ship's mascot, a mixed-breed dog smuggled aboard by a sailor while the ship was docked in San Diego. Sangie, as she was named, could climb a ladder faster than any man and didn't hesitate one bit to guard the lookout station with her fellow sailors.

"She had all the medals, plus the Purple Heart," Johnson said. Well ... all but one medal, that is. Unlike many of her sailor counterparts, Sangie was never bestowed the medal of good conduct. She got into a little trouble during the ship's brief docking for repairs at the San Diego port, and several months later, back out at sea, she gave birth to a litter of puppies.

"We sent her puppies with destroyers as they came to refuel," Johnson said with a smile. "The people on the destroyers were so tickled to get the puppies."

Proud to serve

Johnson has been on the waiting list to take part in the Honor Flight since last spring, when he submitted his application to join a contingent from South Dakota. When that flight was filled, there were about 50 men from southwest Minnesota who were told their trip would be delayed.

The second born of five sons, and among three who served during World War II, Johnson is the only one in his family who served in World War II who is still living. His oldest brother was drafted, while his younger brother enlisted in the Navy and was stationed on a submarine. Johnson dreams of seeing the World War II memorial that honors all three of them for their war-time efforts.

About a month ago, the day before Thanksgiving in fact, Johnson learned he has lung cancer. This week, he was to return to the VA hospital in Sioux Falls to discuss the course of treatment, which will likely be radiation. Just as he fought to do his part in the war, Johnson will fight this cancer too. After all, he is on a mission — a mission to see his memorial.

The fifth INDEPENDENCE (CV-22), begun as Amsterdam (CL-59), was launched as CV-22 on 22 August 1942 by New York Shipbuilding Corp., Camden, N. J.; sponsored by Mrs. Rawleigh Warner; and commissioned 14 January 1943, Captain G. B. Fairlamb, Jr., in command.

The first of a new class of carriers converted from cruiser hulls, INDEPENDENCE conducted shake-down training in the Caribbean. She then steamed through the Panama Canal to join the Pacific Fleet, arriving San Francisco 3 July 1943. INDEPENDENCE got underway for Pearl Harbor 14 July, and after 2 weeks of vital training exercises sailed with carriers Essex and Yorktown for a devastating raid on Marcus Island. Planes from the carrier force struck 1 September and destroyed over 70 percent of the installations on the island. The carrier began her next operation, a similar strike against Wake Island 5 to 6 October, as CVL-22, redesignated 15 July 1943.

America, Bless God

It seems that we so often see signs that read "God Bless America". I wonder what would happen if signs read and people practiced "America, Bless God". It seems to me that there are primarily two groups of people, There are givers and there are takers.

We just recognized with grateful hearts those precious ones who have given their lives for the cause of our freedom. They are givers and on the other side there are those who have done everything possible to escape their responsibility to serve. They are the takers.

This holds true also in our culture as a whole. There are those who willingly give of their means and prayers to support and give thanks to our God for His blessing on our great Nation. And there seems to be those that want to disregard our Heavenly Father and dismiss recognition of all He has done. I remember a saying that spoke of women's advance in our culture that said, "You've come a long way, baby". It seems to me that we have come a long way down from what our country was meant to be by our founding Fathers.

America was found as a Christian Nation. Pericles built a civilization upon culture, and it failed. Caesar built a civilization upon power, and it failed. Our forefathers founded our great Nation upon Christian values and America will live so long as the Lord is Her God. A South American President made a comment to Roger Babson in a conversation when he said, "South America was settled by men who were seeking gold, but North America was settled by men who were seeking God".

I think we can all agree that our world needs the Lord and His direction for our future. Certainly our country needs to acknowledge our need for His leadership in all areas of our lives.

I'm sure that our God would appreciate and honor a National heartfelt thanks and praise for all He has done for us. In that we will continue to benefit from His blessings. In fact, He has given us four steps in returning to His total blessings in and for our Nation. In II Chronicles 7:14 "If My people which are called by My name (1) shall humble themselves (2) and pray (3) and seek My face (4) and turn from their wicked ways, then I will hear from Heaven, and will forgive their sins and heal their land". If we would take seriously these conditions and abide by them then we could rightfully request "American Bless God".

Alexander Ashburn writes in his poem "What Makes a Nation Great":

"The land is great that know the Lord,
Whose songs are guided by His Word,
Where justice rules 'twixt man and man,
Where love controls art and plan;
Where, breathing is his native air,
Each soul finds joy in praise and prayer -
Thus may our country, good and great,
By God's delight - man's best estate.

The manner of giving shows the character of the giver more than the gift itself.

I don't get to see any of you but would appreciate hearing from you by e-mail.

The sixth INDEPENDENCE (CVA-62) was launched by New York Navy Yard 6 June 1958; sponsored by Mrs. Thomas Gates, wife of the Secretary of the Navy; and commissioned 10 January 1959; Captain E. Y. McElroy in command. One of the newest classes of “supercarriers” at the time of her commissioning, INDEPENDENCE conducted shakedown training in the Caribbean and arrived her home port Norfolk, 30 June 1959.

After decommissioning, INDEPENDENCE remained in mothballs for five and a half years before being struck on March 8, 2004. During her time in mothballs, ex-INDEPENDENCE was said to have been heavily stripped to support the active carrier fleet, especially the KITTY HAWK-class carriers. Her port anchor and both anchor chains were used on the new NIMITZ-class carrier USS GEORGE H W BUSH. The recycling of parts and the poor material condition of INDEPENDENCE at the time she was retired made a strong argument against retaining her as a potential museum ship. Her sisters Saratoga and Ranger were retained, and remain on donation hold as of 2006. In April, 2004, Navy officials identified her as one of 24 decommissioned ships available to be sunk as artificial reefs.

Memories from Duty Aboard the USS Bairoko CVE-15

After graduating from a U.S. Navy Class “A” Teleman School in the summer of 1951, I was assigned to the USS Bairoko and put in charge of the post office. At that time the Bairoko had completed one tour of duty around Korea and was beginning to prepare for her second cruise. The day we departed on this new tour of duty we were visited by well known entertainer, Eddy Cantor. His visit was most appreciated and sent on our way to an uncertain future - while still laughing at his jokes.

During my time aboard Bairoko, we had either the Air Group 312, a Marine Fighter Squadron on an anti-submarine Squadron #25 aboard. When the Marines came aboard they brought with them a female dog as their mascot. She soon gave birth to some pups. A photo was taken of our Commanding Officer, Captain Hogle, walking between a line of Sailors and a line of Marines, during an inspection, when called upon “Checkers” was taking a nap in the center of the aisle. The news release article stated that Checkers did not draw any “sack detail” , just a friendly pat - the lucky dog.

The Marine pilots flew the F4U Corsair planes with a brightly distinguished checkerboard pattern painted on the engine cowling. They would wear a scarf of the same pattern around their neck during their missions. One day while on a mission over Korea, Marine Captain W.D. Smart had his plane hit by ground fire. He pulled up to gain altitude and then bailed out; landed on the top of a hill; saw a curving trench which he went to; other pilots flying cover for him called in for a rescue helicopter. Captain Smart had only a side arm for his defense. Two Chinese soldiers came around the curve in the trench and up to him. Each of them had a rifle and one had a bayonet attached. He motioned for Captain Smart to disarm and pointed to the scarf indicating to hand it over. Smart did so and both soldiers left and a little while later the rescue chopper arrived and took him back to the ship.

On the way back from Korea to San Diego after the second deployment, we were directed to Pearl Harbor, Hawaii. At this time John Wayne, the actor, was filming a movie about a detective that was trying to break up a plan to cause damage by a Communist group and to do harm to the city and the Naval Base. The movie was named “Big Jim McLain”. This was not how most of us knew John Wayne. He was wearing a suit and tie. Anyway, they needed a navy ship for the final scene, something like a troop ship and nothing was available. They decided that the Bairoko would work so the Navy gave their permission.

John Wayne came aboard the Bairoko during the final filming and was very friendly. He would pose for the asking, thus I have a photo of myself and “The Duke”. The final filming for the scene of Marines boarding some ship for the trip to Korea lasted maybe one minute, but to this day when I see this old movie, I cannot see a thing that would convince me that a CVE was used in place of a troop ship.

The Bairoko together with the Badoeng Straits, the Rendova and the Bataan along with other CVE carriers served their country well.
